NO.23 サッカーの起源(I)

There is much debate on the origin of the game of football. The Japanese and Chinese claim to have invented a sport similar to modern soccer many centuries ago.

In comparison to modern soccer, the Japanese game of kemari was a game that used a large ball stuffed with *sawdust. This version used a field which was set up by choosing four trees. These trees were usually cherry, maple, pine and willow. Many large houses in Japan would grow these trees to make a field for kemari. Kemari was normally played with two to twelve players.

China's version, *tsu chu, involved players hitting a leather, fur-stuffed ball into a small hole. As in soccer, no player could use his hands during play. It was considered an honor to be part of a team.

The first international soccer or tsu chu match is believed to have been held in China around 50 B.C.
